Summary
The effect of an educational program based on the communicative approach in developing the speaking skills of fifth grade students in the Bani Kenana District.
The study aimed to investigate the effect of an educational program based on the communicative approach in developing vocal and kinesthetic skills and performance as a whole among fifth grade student.
The sample of the study consisted of 60 fifth–grade students in two The results revealed that there were significant differences at the significance level ($\alpha = 0.05$) due to the effect of the educational program on developing speaking skills as a whole, in favor of the experimental group in the preserved public schools affiliated to the Bani Kenana District for the 2007/2008 academic year.
Aloud reading. And the absence of significant differences due to the effect of gender and the interaction between method and gender in developing speaking skills as a whole in both the archives and the reading aloud. And there were no differences in vocal and motor skills in the archives. The results showed that there were significant differences attributable to the gender factor in developing vocal skills in favor of m The position of the archives is attributed to the interaction between method and gender in the phonetic and in favor of the females in the experimental group in the position of oral reading.
